Late summer in Iceland is foraging season. From late July through early September, the highlands begin to turn toward fall. Berries ripen, mushrooms rise through the moss and birch forests, and wild herbs reach their peak, gathered the way Icelanders have for generations.

Nordic Forage celebrates the ritual of foraging and the stunning colors of the landscape along the way. Rowan clusters glow red and orange on the trees. Meadowsweet, mountain sorrel, and mountain avens—Iceland's national flower—bloom late across the hillsides. Mushrooms and mossy rocks bring earthy browns and grays, balanced by the teal of lagoons and slow rivers. Rosemaling and rune motifs add a Scandinavian touch.
