I grew up in the inner city of Chicago, but in the evenings, my neighborhood carried a quiet, country-like spirit. When the summer sun dipped and the air softened, I chased fireflies, cupping them gently in my hands. Wildflowers grew—untamed and unbothered. Barn owls glided through the night sky.

But the moonlight changed everything. Under its glow, the world became softer, quieter, more forgiving. The city noise faded, and peace took its place. I recall how those moments made me feel: free, curious, safe in the unknown.

Moonlight is my attempt to hold onto that feeling, to return to that boy who found wonder in the quiet, saw magic in ordinary places, and believed that the night was his.
